Steris Corp. and Philips Healthcare deals add jobs, punch to Northeast Ohio's biomedical economy

By Michelle Jarboe McFee

CLEVELAND, Ohio -- With Philips Healthcare and Steris Corp. expecting to add 200 local jobs within a year, state and local leaders see more proof that Northeast Ohio's medical economy can compete on a national - and sometimes global - stage. Philips confirmed Tuesday that it will consolidate its nuclear medicine division in Highland Heights, where the multinational company has 1,200 employees. The project will bring 100 jobs here from San Jose, Calif., at an average salary of $115,000.

Kasich announces creation of 75 new jobs at STERIS

By John Arthur Hutchison

Gov. John Kasich appeared Tuesday at STERIS Corp. in Mentor to help the company announce plans for a new fabrication center that will create 75 new manufacturing and engineering jobs. Kasich said the effort is part of his JobsOhio initiative, which is a private, nonprofit corporation designed to lead the state's job-creation efforts to attract and retain jobs. "This is a great announcement here, this is just a company on the cutting edge of medicine, and that's what it is really about, just another good development here in the state of Ohio," Kasich said. "It's still a tough environment out there ... Let's celebrate good news, because for too long we had nothing but a steady stream of bad news." As part of his effort to focus on jobs, Kasich noted that he was very pleased that Ohio's unemployment rate fell last month by 0.5 percent. "Every day we get up, we think about what we can do to promote, what can we do to remove obstacles and what can we do to make sure Ohio is growing," Kasich said.

Steris Corp., Philips Healthcare to move total of 200 jobs to Northeast Ohio

By Chuck Soder

Two of Northeast Ohio's biggest medical technology companies plan to move a total of 200 jobs to the region, with some help from state and local incentives. Steris Corp. this morning announced it is adding 100 positions in Mentor. A few hours later, Philips Healthcare announced plans to create another 100 jobs by moving a research-and-development operation to Highland Heights from San Jose, Calif.

Kasich's medical corridor lures 175 jobs

By Joe Vardon

HIGHLAND HEIGHTS, Ohio — Gov. John Kasich insists that his statewide medical corridor is still under construction. But even the idea of a coordinated effort to collaborate on research by Ohio's major hospitals is drawing investment into the state. Kasich joined officials of two health-care-related companies in the Cleveland area yesterday for jobs announcements. In both cases, at Philips Healthcare in Highland Heights and Steris in Mentor, company officials cited Kasich's budding medical corridor as a reason for expansion.
